

Through the Door

Doors are important. They can open in front of us, and close behind us. They can be locked, to stop us getting in. Or out.

Some people have painted their doors to provide inspiration. We would like you to write a short story called 'Through the Door'. Imagine you are standing in front of one of these doors in the pictures. What would be behind it? Is it a wonderful opportunity or a terrifying experience? Is it something ordinary or something from another world? Who do you meet?

Write a short story that will amaze, entertain and enthrall the English Department here at Finham Park 2 – we look forward to reading your work! Make sure it is your best work – you might want to draft it first then copy it up in your best writing to really impress us.

For inspiration you could look at some past winners of the BBC's 500 Words competition. You can find them here: <https://www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/articles/KNWskPrg7stQ54tTbcf6P7/500-words-the-stories>
